LUNCHEON NEWS

By Shirley E. M. Mears

Thomas Harrison will be sharing ways for each of us to consider using our time well and to "Go Out with a Bang"!

Thomas Harrison, Ambassador of Communication at Media Embassy will be sharing stories of people who, late in life, made huge impressions on their community and even the world. Just the mention of Colonel Sanders secret flavor recipe of 11 herbs and spices creates images of "finger lickin" good chicken to most of the country.

Our culture, it seems, believes that youth is more desirable than experience; and yet we are learning that more and more people of advanced years are boldly changing the way society views aging. Thomas Harrison hears many stories about how the church and its people are able to encourage others every day in seizing each day God gives us.

Through Media Embassy, Harrison helps churches and nonprofits with their marketing, public relations and image and event service needs. He also helps design advertising campaigns and consults with church staff about marketing for events. Additionally, he represents authors and speakers as a publicist. Most of his time is spent meeting with clients and media representatives. One of Harrison's services -- which Dr. Stan Toler, General Superintendent for the Church of the Nazarene and former Senior Pastor of Trinity Church of the Nazarene in Oklahoma City, has used is the Secret Church Shopper Evaluation and Five Star Facility Inspections.

Harrison will be sharing ways for each of us to consider using our time well and to "Go Out with a Bang"!

Your President's Point of View

by Jack David Armold

We cannot discover a "brave, new world" until we have the courage to leave our nests and fly!

The eagles that live in the canyons of Colorado use a special kind of stick with which to build their nests. A female eagle will sometimes fly as many as twohundred miles in a single day in order to find a branch from an ironwood tree.

Not only are the ironwood sticks as strong as their name suggests, they have thorns that allow them to lock together so that the nest can set securely on a ledge high up on the wall of the canyon. After building the nest, the eagle pads it with layer upon layer of leaves, feathers, and grass to protect newborn eagles from the sharp thorns of the ironwood.

In her preparations, the female cagle goes to great lengths to promote the survival of the birds she will hatch. This interest in their survival extends well beyond their birth, although the expression of that interest changes. As the young eagles grow, they fight for space. Their demands for food eventually become such that the mother eagle cannot feed them what they need. She instinctively knows that in order to survive, her brood is going to have to leave its nest.

To encourage the young eagles to fend for themselves, the mother eagle pulls the padding out of the nest so that the thorns of the ironwood will prick the birds. As their living conditions become more painful, they are forced to climb up on the edge of the nest. As they begin to plummet to the bottom of the canyon, they wildly flap their wings to brake their falls, and end up doing what is the most natural thing in the world for an eagle—they fly! Human beings often find themselves in a similar situation. When our lives can no longer provide us with the growth we desire, and change must take place, we

4 The Academy Perspective

April 2010

Act utilitarianism holds that right action is that which produces more pleasure and less pain for everyone than any other action.

Case study: Suppose that you are a judge in a small town in South Africa. The police bring a black man before you, charging him with raping a white woman the night before. The woman, who is the only witness, has positively identified him although the rape took place in the dark of the night. The rape has incensed the townspeople, and a mob of vigilantes has formed. The mob declares that if you do not sentence the black man to death, then they will raid the small black settlement outside the town and kill several black women in revenge. You know that they will carry out this threat and that you have no way of stopping them.

However, a few hours ago, by sheer improbable coincidence, you happened to be alone at the bedside of a dying friend who, just before dying, confessed that he had committed the rape. It would be useless to bring this utterly improbable story to the mob; they would simply accuse you of trying to get the black man off the hook by making up an unlikely story.

What should you do? Would condemning an innocent man to death be terribly wrong in this South African case?

Can you think of other cases that would pose an ethical dilemma?

How would you judge the new health legislation? Will it provide more pleasure and less pain or more pain and less pleasure to the greatest number of Americans?

Dr. Jack David Armold will discuss both utilitarianism and pragmatism at the last RIG session of this season ON MAY 10. Come and join in the discussion!

LIBRARY NEWS I HAVE A DREAM By Arlita Harris

I have a dream, and I'm telling you about it to see if you share my dream.

If asked, most of us would identify ourselves as lifelong learners...but, what are we really learning? There are so many things we want to learn and so many places we want to go, but sometimes it's easier to just keep doing the same things with the same people than do discover new learning experiences.

Here's my dream: I'd like to visit places around the world, but after I had studied their history and culture. I'd like to learn more about ballet, opera, the symphony, theater, and art; then experience it so I can use my newfound knowledge. I'd like to go to professional sports events after learning the rules of the game.

If you share this dream, we could make a list of what we would like to learn, find someone to teach us, and then locate the related experience that would let us use our new knowledge. Maybe it's studying impressionism before an impressionist exhibit comes to the Art Museum; maybe it's studying Chinese history and culture before a trip to China; maybe it's learning about the Indian cultures of our area before going to the Red Earth Festival; perhaps it's studying Shakespeare before going to a play at the Globe Theater and visiting the Avon area; maybe it's learning the rules of hockey before going to a game.

After agreeing upon some things we'd like to learn, we could locate someone to teach us, arrange some classes that fit our schedules, and then plan the related event. Perhaps we should start slowly....one trip and one event per year. Everyone would not be interested in everything, but eventually we could have enough interest groups to have a year-round schedule of learning opportunities.

If this resonates with your interests, send me an e-mail at aharris@snu.edu or stop and see me at the SNU Library (2nd floor - across from the elevator) or drop me at note Arlita Harris, 3737 North College, Apt. 224, Bethany, OK 73008. Share your learning dreams.

P.S. Watch the walls on the south side of Asbury and 39th Street. The first two murals depicting Bethany's history will be painted in late May by Bethany resident and muralist Dr. Bob Palmer beginning the Bethany Murals Project.

The Academy Perspective

Jack David Armold Is Archived! by Shirley E. M. Mears

Jack David Armold, president of The Academy of Senior Professionals, is featured on the Where's Shirley Interviews page of the www.thegospelstation.com website. The segment was recorded in Chuck Schroeder's office at the National Cowboy & Western Heritage Museum.

The focus of the interview was to promote information on the Senior Adult Conference 2010, (SAC2010). Jack David had been interested in hosting another senior event since the first conference in 2001. An eagerness to offer great information for the members of The Academy of Senior Professionals as well and the surrounding communities have fueled the effort of a growing team of volunteers.

The volunteer team includes Emmalyn German, Dr. Elbert and Darlene Overholt, Linda Dobson, Roy Dorris, Connie Daniels, John Martin, Petra Burdine, Treva Hill, Joan Zubik, Renda Brumbeloe, Irwin Harris, Paul Scheie, Brad Swartout, Rhonda Thomas, Mark House, Pat Perry and Shirley Mears.

As Co-director, I have been able to work along side Jack David and have had the pleasure of benefiting from his influence for excellence.

I want to say a special THANK YOU to my friend, Jack David Armold may need to leave our comfort zone, guaranteed safety and pleasurable familiarity behind. Just as the baby eagles are reluctant to leave the nest, we also may resist change. We may tolerate the increasing discomfort because we are afraid of the unknown.

Since this is my last editorial as President of the Academy of Senior Professionals (ASP) at my beloved alma mater, Southern Nazarene University (SNU), I wish to express my deep gratitude to the late and present members of the ASP, ASP Founder Elbert David Overholt, and SNU President Loren Gresham for allowing me to serve as the ASP President for the past twelve years. With the new rotation system found in our recently revised ASP Bylaws, I will have the privilege of serving as the ASP Past-President for the 2010-2011 academic year.

Longevity as President and the need for change convinced me that I am ready to move on and experience new challenges. If my fear of the unknown had temporarily increased my acceptance of the status quo, then circumstances could have gotten thorny enough that, like the growing eagles, I would have been coaxed into moving on.

When the time comes to venture out and accept new challenges, we should try, with God's help, to remember that we have the ability not only to survive but to prosper. Our Creator designed us to achieve soaring levels of spirituality, success, and service; this means that we never have to settle for less than a flourishing, abundant. and meaningful life.

Within each of us, there are divine, natural, and creative resources that can be realized and utilized only when we climb to the edge of the nest, slip off into the air, fly, and discover "a brave, new world"!
