With the summer heat come new, skimpy fashions created to scintillate the viewer and make the lucky owner feel his best. NNC too has fallen victim to this yearly fashion war. And so with all the pageantry so deserving of this auspicious event, we at the Crü@der present to you, gentle readers, a fashion regalia. This cover photo is just a taste... a tease, if you will, of what the men of the NNC Philosophy Department have to share with you.

Whether contemplating Kant by the pool or working on achieving that mayonnaise skin tone over Plato, these boys are sure to be looking sharp this summer. The wise looks on their faces carefully discloses the animal nature within.

From left to right: John Bever gazes playfully at a colorful beach ball, the question on everyone's mind is sure to be, is he thinking about Kierkegaard or his recent trip to the Vidal Sassoon Salon. Brint Montgomery (a.k.a. Tiger) strikes a pose that emphasizes the mystery of his character and masculinity. Last, but certainly far from least, Eric Manchester tugs at his beard in a way only a true philosophy god can. Take a look inside, you're sure to enjoy. BY Theo West

Viscious Tactics

BY Dave Neil

The other day I was walking down the deserted streets of Boston minding my own business looking for some rare bottle caps when all of a sudden 7 guys in orange robes with their heads shaved roll up to me on their skateboards. I tell myself to act casual and to not do anything rash or foolish. I had heard stories but I'd never actually seen the infamous Krishna Thrash Gang. And I'll have to be a little honest here, because that's the only thing that saved me that fateful night, I was a little scared.

We just stood there looking at each other. The streets were silent and somewhere a dog was barking. (Somewhere else there was another dog barking and his owner came out and kicked it in the head. The neighbor saw him do this to the dog and he called Greenpeace and they sent a ship to block the harpoons only they got a ticket for failure to signal a lane change. But that's another story.) One of the orange robed men reached into his pocket and brought out a small razor and a can of Barbasol shave cream. I knew that they intended to shave my head.

Twenty minutes went by before anyone said anything, and it was the man with the blade who asked me if I was from out of town. I said, "Yes." Then it was silent again. I glanced at my watch and it told me that I had nearly 14 minutes left until my time would be caught up with the clock that didn't work. All that was to say that it was 3:47am and I was not going to be missed until at least 4:03am next hour. I had to think...

Then it came to me. I'd get away with the old, "Your shoe's untied!" gag. But when? I had to wait for just the right moment. We stood there for another 7 minutes and finally one of them shifted his weight.

"Your shoe's untied!"

The next moment lasted at least 10 seconds. They were all stunned and then slowly and all at once they all looked down at their shoes. I dashed off into the night laughing and guffawing like there was no tomorrow. They had forgotten too late that they all were wearing sandals.

to be especially careful: You're going to be late for class if you don't hurry. You see that the sidewalks are already wet, so you decide to try the grass. You look to the right. Then the left. The right again. No sign of any spraying water. Not even a drop. So you run. Halfway there you slow down a little, smile to yourself, thinking you've got it made. Suddenly, SWOOSH! Stit, stit, stit, stit. You're drenched! You're late for class. you could have walked on the sidewalks for this.

Well, there are only 2 weeks of school left. Maybe we can make the best of the "all-night-watering-the-sidewalk-parties." Try "Dodge the Sprinklers." This can be especially fun if you're first in the line of your friends to run through. The last in line is always sure to get soaked. Or maybe try to see who can find the driest, quickest way back to the dorm. Make up your own games! After all, we all know there's nothing to do this last week before finals...

Sidewalks Growing

BY Lorie Palmer

Studying in my room, I heard the shrieks of those running by on the sidewalk outside. I knew why they were screaming. I had been there. I heard groups of people complaining that they had to walk clear around the Ad Building to get to SAGA. Others said they had to walk on the opposite side of the road just to get away from IT.

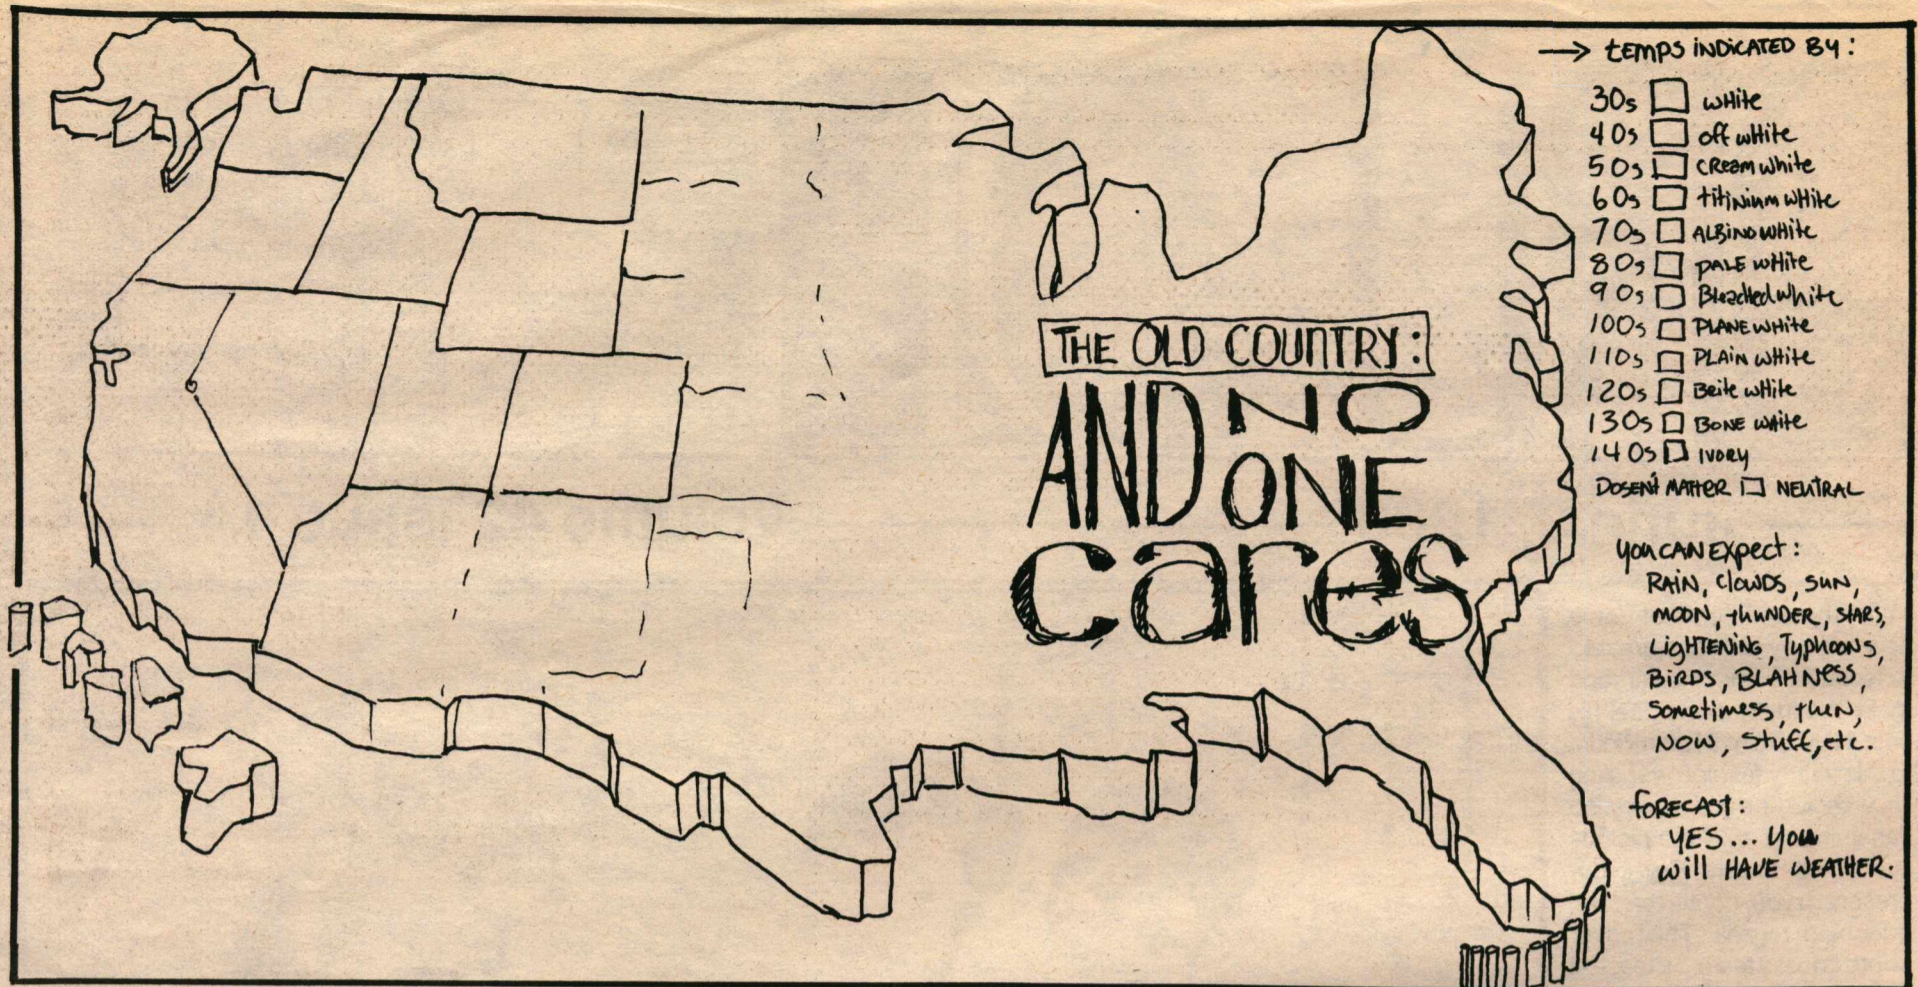

What is IT? The sprinklers.

Irrigation? Whatever happened to Flooding? Flooding was fun. With flooding, we were still free to walk on the sidewalks. Now, because of the new sprinkling system, we can't walk on the sidewalks or the grass without getting soaked. Where can we talk? Down the middle of the road, maybe.

You may think I'm exaggerating. If you do, take this test: 1) walk from SAGA to Morrison, Culver, or Dooley after 6pm 2) walk between Morrison and Dooley after 8pm and 3) walk from the Ad Building to Student Center at any given time. Ten to one you end up wet (by the way, you most likely won't be walking, but running).

Leland Ford Taylor II Live Band Dance

BY Leland Ford Taylor II

Let me start by saying that I had every intention in coming back here for two terms when I walked up those golden steps shook Gordon's hand and became graduated. I don't think anyone will ever know how much I enjoyed myself here. When people ask me (and in the future I will say y the same thing) how much fun I have had a Northwest Nazarene College I can only answer with "a lot". Yes I did get tired and I still do when people talk about the apathy and other icky things that seem to be infesting the campus. Every year somebody mentions them all. And every year after they have run their course, they all go on vacation only to come back the next year to be talked about again. I hope I never see anybody here. And if I did, it didn't mean to. I never sang in chapel, I never stayed overnight in Culver, I never walked to the lake, I never saw ice in Saga, oh all right I did but I payed my debt. I woke a lot of people up in the middle of the night. But it was the middle of my day sometimes. I hid in peoples closets, rolled bowling balls down many a stair, celebrated the 4th of July sometimes 4 days a week, kicked my R.A., threw debts at guys in my hall, kicked my R.A., stole all the toilet seats in Mangum Hall for one week until they brought my records back, financed many a dorm party on my fines alone, but never did I ever throw snowballs or water balloons at members of the faculty or staff. I don't think.

I would have to say one of my greatest accomplishments here at NNC wa having 20 roommates over 17 terms. Kim Wannamaker, Rob Richardson, John Meyer, Derick Bauder, Perry Arbagast, Troy Haoage, en Vaughn, Jeff Bramson, Jim Bennett, Rob Duncan, Fletcher Machen, Steve Rimbey, John Mack, Jamey Christy, Mike Gilbert, Steve Curl, Jeff Orth, Mark McKay, Mike Harrison, Timothy Taylor, (my brother), and Rob Duncan again. I had a good time with all of them. And I don't recall ever having any serious problems with any of them. I think Rob and Kim were my favorites. They all mean a lot to me but some people just mean more to you. I couldn't write a list of my most memorable moments because I would have trouble ranking them all. But I will always remember Dr. Shaw's classes, (Steve on the ball field and at Louies), Dr. Cooke's honesty, Gaymon Bennett's creative writing class, Dr. Mary Schaffer's mean streak and her temperamental pleasantness, (I love you Mary.) And Jim Mikkelson's theology class. But the three teachers I will always cherish, for they taught me the most about myself, are Kirk Freeman, Scott Bennett and Steve Heilmer. All of whom were art professors here at NNC, and all who moved onto bigger and better things. They taught me to tap my creative nature and through themselves showed me more things and taught me things about my Jesus Christ than any other instructor here at NNC. C. S. Cowles made looking through the Bible a heck of a lot easier but my time spent in the basement of the Fine Arts building is by far the most valuable. Kirk, Steve, and Scott taught me how to be patient, when to break things and when not to, how to be more expressive, and most of all how valuable my personal walk with Jesus Christ really is. Gordon Wetmore is one of the best I've ever met and the worst, they know who they are. I hold no grudges but I do have addresses and phone numbers.

Dear Editor:

Last week I was flushed with outrage over something I found in the toilet of the Library Men's Room. It wasn't so much the prank itself -- if that is what it was. Perhaps the drowning of a library book was a relapse of "sophomoric" behavior rather than an act of literary criticism, but fishing that novel from its porcelain grave was a catalyst for reflection on the value of books, information, and literacy. Think of it! What is more central to a college campus than a well maintained library? Reading -- the ability to, the freedom to, the need to -- and the widespread availability of information is the foundation of education, especially a liberal arts education. To discern, to weight ideas against one's own values, to make informed decisions, and to develop a world view require reading. This is why a liberal arts college library strives to maintain a well balanced collection which presents more than one perspective. And reading is fundamental to democracy. Reflect on it! Why are librarians and other educators concerned about literacy? So that people can pass their driver's license tests? function in their jobs? read the sports page? Yes, that and more. An informed citizenry is essential to democracy and citizens become informed through reading. The public library is a basic democratic institution to which the citizenry can come, without charge and without question, to become informed. So, this summer read widely, read wisely, read for pleasure, but do it with an awareness of the blessing and impact of reading on our society. Jesus said, "Then you will know the truth, and the truth will set you free." Randall C. Simmons

CAMPUS MOVE

BY Local Real Estate Agent

On a national average, every household in America moves once every 5 years. After 75 years in Nampa, Idaho, it is time for NNC to pack its bags and go. Yes, that's right, move! Nampa, Idaho, is not the best place for NNC to be. NNC is stagnating in the town of Nampa by not attracting more students due to the limited population and not being able to offer more in the realm of culture.

There will be many advantages to a larger area. The population is very limited here in Nampa. If NNC was to move to a large metro, we would have unlimited resources to draw from. Drawing a larger enrollment would eventually lower tuition costs. (The cost of living might be somewhat higher in a metropolitan area, but an increase in enrollment would more than likely balance this out and possibly make it better.)

I was unable to get exact figures on how much it would cost for NNC to move. There are too many unknowns. For example, where the future campus would be located, how much NNC could sell this campus for, and cost to transfer professors and staff. In my opinion, after surveying professors and alumni, NNC would come out ahead and start growing and expanding for NNC here at Nampa, but at the same time agreed that a larger area would be more beneficial in the long run.

Finding activities to do around Nampa can sometimes be a problem. I have heard many students comment that there is nothing to do around here. This will many times result in students finding things to do that aren't a part of NNC's policy.

Some of the advantages of moving to an area like Portland-Vancouver would be what the area had to offer. For example, greater job opportunities, major shopping centers, and more recreation. Not only is there professional basketball (the Portland Trailblazers), ice hockey, and baseball. There are major rivers near by (Columbia), Mt. Hood, and of course the ocean is only a short drive away. The climate and geography is very inviting! There is green grass, trees, rolling fields, mountains (that invites all kinds of sports recreation) and all the excitement the city has to offer.

One advantage that was pointed out to me was the access to businesses and companies for internships. What an opportune place to have hands-on experience. NNC would be able to expand and grow in the area of degrees and majors compared to what is being offered now. In a larger area, the students could do field experience or internship in almost any area. Along that same line, transportation advantages. There are buses going everywhere. You wouldn't need a car to get around like you do here. If you don't want to take the bus, you can take the light rail system, call a cab, or even rent a car.

I also talked with about 35-40 students on the idea of moving the campus. On a scale of 1-10, ten being the highest, 90% gave the rating of 8. I then asked then if they thought that moving to a larger metro area would increase or decrease the enrollment. 100% responded saying they thought enrollment would increase. Many were turned off by the Nampa area and would love the life, activities, opportunities, and excitement of a bigger city.

A few interviewees said they liked the small area of Nampa and were worried about keeping the Christian atmosphere if it moved to a big city.

This idea of moving NNC to a west coast location is not my idea. There has been talk of this for quite a long time. A great many alumni were interviewed and polled on the idea. There are future plans for NNC and one of those plans is for it to grow. Moving to a larger area would be one way to make this happen. By the results of my survey, the students are supportive of this. Why not let the college know how you feel? Since the students pay to go to NNC, we should have a say in where the best place for NNC to be is. Dr. Wetmore needs to hear from you. Another source that needs to hear from you is the Board of Regents. The Chairman of the Board is Leon Doane. You may contact him through the Board of Regents c/o NNC.

T.W. : Tell us about the opening band.
 S.R. : White Lion? They were really limited by stage space.
 G.Z. : Yea...and an article of clothing got thrown up on stage
 T.W. : Were they any good?
 H.H. : We were late because of intramural softball. We lost to the H.U.P.P.s
 G.Z. : Some guy took a flying leap onto the stage...
 S.R. : I wanted to tell that!
 G.Z. : Go ahead and tell it.
 S.R. : No you.
 G.Z. : Anyway he hit the monitors right on the chest. This was during Aerosmith, but we should finish talking about White Lion.
 S.R. : They have two albums out and they cater to the 14 and 15 year olds.
 H.H. : Yea.
 T.W. : Tell us about the guitar solo you mentioned earlier.
 S.R. : I thought the guitar solo sounded just like Eddie VanHalen's "Eruption." Get something original. Harv missed it, he was in the bathroom. I saw Leroy Slemmer in the bathroom.
 T.W. : Was there a long break between bands?
 H.H. : Yea.
 S.R. : Did you guys see the little girl down front that some guy was holding on his shoulders? I thought it was adorable.
 T.W. : So would you guys take your kids to something like this?

G.Z. : I heard Michael W. Smith
 H.H. : They did some pretty lewd stuff (This next section has been edited on behalf of our less mature readers, those between 18 and 22)
 T.W. : How were they dressed?
 S.R. : No make-up, leather pants, white fringes. I'm not really into fringes, but they looked cool on him.
 T.W. : How long have they been together?
 H.H. : Since the early 1970's.
 T.W. : So, tell me about the stage, you all mentioned that it was really cool.
 G.Z. : Oh yeah, they had a big blue thing that came down, a big triangle, with yellow lights during the drum solo.
 At this point an argument broke out as to whether or not Harv had been in the bathroom during this special effect that only happened during the drum solo.
 H.H. : The lights were pretty cool during one song, strobes, smoke and blue laser...
 S.R. : No way, man there were no blue lights, you must have been in the bathroom.
 They all agreed that there were plenty of good looking girls at the concert, but Scott wanted everyone to know he didn't notice any of them. The conversation went on to discuss the various audience members and some of their actions.
 H.H. : There were lots of clean cut people there too, Greg Mylander was there. He's a total straight arrow, worse than Greg.

they felt about being at a concert where people were taking drugs Scott Ray replied : I'm a purely natural rightist, I believe they have the right to do anything they want to do, like I don't infringe on their rights if they don't infringe on mine.
 H.H. : It's against the law.
 S.R. : I'll never have kids
 T.W. : So what did they open with?
 G.Z. : "Toys in the Attic."
 H.H. : They played a lot of old stuff. I heard they were going to cover some Beatles songs.
 S.R. : I heard they were going to cover U2
 G.Z. : The drum solo was great, he had these electric drum sticks that he could beat on his body or anything.
 S.R. : Yea, these people in the audience held up their hands and he played on them.
 G.Z. : Harv got beat up by this big Rock and Roll chick.
 H.H. : Yea, I tried to take her Anthrax T-shirt.
 S.R. : I bought a T-shirt.
 H.H. : I didn't, I was gonna stand outside and take one from a little kid.
 G.Z. : Yea, I got six T-shirts and not one was my size.
 T.W. : You could make them into a quilt
 G.Z. : The bass guitarist was a total bore, he just stood there.
 S.R. : The synthesizer guy was a real gheek, he was doing Madonna stuff.

Overall the interview went pretty smooth and it was easy to see that these boys as well as several other NNC students had a great evening at the Aerosmith concert last week.

When I asked the boys how some summer reading selections, but this year, I decided to bring others of my colleagues to my aid in offering some of their favorite "souls tacked down on paper." I asked them to think of three books that they liked so well that they wanted to read again, books that made an impact on them in some way, or books that shaped the way they think. Here are the books, some heavy, some light, and here's to you and summer reading.

Most of us here at the college take very seriously the tremendous gratitude we owe to the great authors--those thinkers and writers of our time and other times--who have shaped the way we think, and thus who we are. And it is always a great privilege, indeed a joy, to be able to share some of my favorite authors and books with students and friends.

This time of year always brings a few students interested in the mysteries of knowledge to my office for

Our God Reigns... Yes it is from Psalms, but a dangerous mentality has crept into our minds: The idea of possessing God. The Israelites were wrong because they thought that God belonged to them. God said "No way, I am God of the nations." The church in America is dangerously close to slipping into the concept of a national deity. The merging of America's causes and God's causes is not too far off. It isn't a new concept... Israel did it and was enslaved and forced into all the world...Rome did it and was conquered by the barbarians...It seems that every time in history that a nation started to hoard God in Divine nationalism, God made sure that the blessing was passed on forcibly or otherwise. The prime concern of God is not the survival of a nation, but the salvation of the world. God has never hesitated to sacrifice national identity for the cause of advancing the Kingdom of God. This is not a hell, fire and brimstone message of damnation impending, rather it is a reminder of God's priorities.

SUMMER FUN WITH THE MEN OF THE PHILOSOPHY DEPARTMENT

Just what will the best dressed man in your life be wearing this summer season? Hopefully the preview of exciting fashions from designers world-wide featured on the next few pages will give you some helpful suggestions. After carefully selecting only the best from Perry Ellis, Geoffrey Beene and the Sears Winnie the Pooh collection, we hope to have covered every budget range and lifestyle.

Our models are collegiate men with busy lives and active schedules, but they were willing (with some coaxing) to take time out for a few snapshots. Make fashion notes, get to know the guys up close through the information provided. This season is full of colors, intrigue and mystery men, many of whom are available.

THE MUSIC
 Black flag spots hang high and low on a five lined fence
 As the wind blows through them they whistle a silent tune to our inattentive minds
 The breath of God flies like angels through our ears and sets us down in a pasture of passion as our fingers slide to the sound of familiar skin
 Like parallel harmony High and Low we are a universal melody that cannot be measured and our minds hear the same lyrics that call to our impatience
 Tim Urain (1st and 2nd Bertha Dooley)

The Dining Anthenaeum
 Plates, sups, pitchers filling shelves like Dusty books--stories written over many years; Ancient writings translated by Grandma and sometimes mother.
 Cupboards from floor to ceiling-- Stories in plain-jacketed volumes, Enticing the browser as if Bound in gold and leather.
 Bells clustered together--an Anthology of crystal and china poems. Each embody rings its own story; Rhythm created by the curious reader.
 Jay Lenn (3rd poetry, 1st short story)
