Your president's point of view:

by Jack David Armold

Ethical insights from the hit film, What the bleep does it mean?

While I was vacationing in Ft. Lauderdale. Florida, last December, I saw a movie which motivated me to think more deeply about my life's choices, past and present choices, and infinite possibilities in my future. The name of the movie is What the bleep does it mean?

William Arntz, Betsy Chasse, and Mark Vicente, who produced this unique film that became a runaway success, were able to combine the principles of quantum physics within an entertaining story. Many critics write that they have achieved "legend status."

Amanda, the protagonist in the movie, was living a life of quiet desperation because of a failed marriage, her disillusionment with the established church, and a growing lack of interest in her profession as a photographer; however, several people and events caused her to improve her God-consciousness and resonance with the universe. In the final act of the movie as Amanda walked past the church, she looked and smiled and kept on going. Viewers were actually taken back to the opening scene.

Amanda entered the cinema, where she became aware of herself in what is called the super position in quantum physics. She was in three places at one time. Amanda walked out of the cinema and into the street where she passed many people doing many different things. Each of them was a different version of herself. She passed a thought-provoking sign that read, "Make known the unknown."

So, what the bleep does it mean? In its simplest form, my total response was as follows: I should ask myself deeper questions than I have in the past. What is it that I don't know yet that could empower me?

"The wise man knows that he knows nothing."

—Socrates (ca. 470-399 B.C.)

The first ethical insight that I gained from the movie was We're never too old to learn. One classic way that senior adults keep themselves stuck in the mire of their past, or in their Slough of Despond, is by convincing themselves that they cannot learn anything new because they are too old.

The excuse runs something like this: "You can't teach an old dog new tricks." This old chestnut, however, cracks wide open upon careful examination! Contemporary research has shown that people can learn as much in their eighties as they could in their twenties. So, why do so many older people seem to struggle to learn new things?

Let us look at the typical learning cycle for the answer. We enter the world, and everything is new. If we want to survive, we have to learn as much as possible and as quickly as possible. Research shows that the majority of people learn more between the ages of zero and five than they will for the remainder of their lives.

By the time we reach our mid-twenties, the one common experience shared by all of us has been learning—but, sadly for many, that is where it ends!

The truly educated never graduate! The largest asset we will ever own is not a home but the knowledge and wisdom gained Continued next column from our continued learning. This asset can never be taken from us. The Internal Revenue Service cannot seize it. We cannot lose it in a divorce. It will always be ours.

If we want to build assets that are ours forever, we must keep learning! In doing so, we will be able to continue our education for as long as we wish. Lifelong learning is the major thrust of the Academy of Senior Professionals at Southern Nazarene University. As President, this has been my major focus for the past six years and will continue to be it as long as I am in this office.

"I'm still learning."

-Michelangelo (1475-1564) at 87 years of age

The second ethical insight that I received from the movie was that I can focus on a power moment at any time, and the energy of that moment can become my fuel.

Dr. Dov Baron, a therapist, advocates in his Web site, www.whatthebleepdoesitmean.com, that you should follow the three steps of his Equation for Manifestation to improve your focus on a power moment:

The topic of Faith has been in the news extensively in recent months. A book that may be of additional interest is The Faiths of Our Fathers: What America's Founders Really Believed, by Alf J. Mapp, Jr. who has also written several other books on the subject.

Comments offered by readers suggest that throughout our nation's history, the religious beliefs of America's Founders have been contested and misunderstood. Did our Founders advocate Christianity or atheism? In this book, acclaimed historian Alf J. Mapp, Jr., cuts through the historical uncertainty to accurately portray the religious beliefs of eleven of America's Founding Fathers, including John Adams, Benjamin Franklin, Thomas Jefferson, and James Madison. He discovers men with religious beliefs as diverse as their political opinions. These profiles may shed light on not only the lives and times of the revolutionary generation but also the role of religion in public life throughout American history."

In The Faiths of Our Fathers Mapp employs the thoughtful and graceful narrative style we have come to expect from his books and brings much-needed light to an issue that has confused Americans for generations. (In the SNU library.)

ACADEMY DIRECTOR OVERHOLT PRESENTS NEW OFFICERS

By Elbert Overholt (ASP Director)

HISTORIAN: Lecil Brown

"Memory is one of God's great gifts to us." This is the leading sentence in a short autobiography written by Lecil Brown, recently appointed Historian of the Academy of Senior Professionals.

Lecil was born in White County, Arkansas. He started his education in a three-room school in Letona, AR. He learned much from school as well as from cotton chopping, corn cultivating, hay baling, and other farm chores during his early years in Arkansas.

At the age of seventeen Lecil joined the Merchant Marines and served on a Liberty Ship until the end of WWII. He came to Bethany Peniel College (now SNU) in January, 1947. He received his bachelor's degree from BPC in 1952 and gained a master's degree from Wichita State University in 1955.

Lecil has been a successful businessman and banker in Wichita and in Florida. He has worked for SNU in the development of wills. His wife, Glorene, is also a member of the Academy and has previously given seminars to our group interested in genealogy. We appreciate the Browns and their willingness to serve others.

Lecil is filling the vacancy left by the resignation of Dr. Paul Gresham. Dr. Paul served admirably as historian for the Academy until recently. Our gratitude and appreciation go to both Paul and Lecil.

The Peer Learning Network invites ASP members and guests to 2nd annual "PLN Presents" Luncheon featuring David Gergen

By Becky Walker

For the second year, the Peer Learning Network (PLN) has invited the members of the Academy of Senior Professionals to join them as guests at the PLN Presents luncheon featuring former White House advisor David Gergen.

This year's luncheon will take place in Oklahoma City, Friday, April 8, 2005, from 11:00 a.m. to 1:00 p.m. at the Cox Convention Center in Great Hall C.

For more than 30 years, Gergen has been an active participant in American national life. Author of Evewitness to Power: The Essence of Leadership, Nixon to Clinton, Gergen offers an inside glimpse into the corridors of power and the leadership challenges presidents face, bringing clarity to the most complex international and domestic issues.

A noted conservative who served Presidents Nixon, Ford and Reagan, Mr. Gergen brought his wisdom and hands-on knowledge to Bill Clinton's first years in the White House. Today he helps audiences break through ideological barriers to recognize simple and lasting political truths.

Gergen currently serves as editor-at-large of U.S. News & World Report, as director of the Center for Public Leadership at Harvard's John F. Kennedy School of Government and as a regular contributor to PBS' The NewsHour with Jim Lehrer.

Cost for the Renaissance-catered luncheon is $7.50 for ASP members and $40 for non-members. Please make checks payable to Southern Nazarene University. Cash and credit cards are also accepted.

- 1. Focus on your desired outcome with a clear and specific thought.
- 2. As you hold the thought, you will be able to get in touch with feelings of what it would be like to experience your desired outcome.
- Now, go deep into your mind and focus on those feelings, at the expense of all other thoughts or feelings, and do it consistently.

Dr. Baron concludes, "Your ability to focus exclusively on those feelings determines the degree to which you will experience your desired outcome."

"Our deepest fear is not that we are inadequate.

Our deepest fear is that we are powerful beyond measure."

--Marianne Williamson, A Return to Love

The third and final ethical insight that fascinated me about the movie was Quality Resonance Field (QRF). It is the sum of our personal history, thoughts, and experiences expressed as an energetic field.

We can think of our QRF as a radio station that is broadcasting across the universe. The problem is that we are not always in control of our play list. It is quite likely that the radio station is playing some very old tapes (our history). Even though we may want to play contemporary music, it keeps playing the same old, tired songs.

In this example, we will attract only the people, events, and experiences (our station's audience) that resonate with that play list. We will never attract an audience who wants to hear Mozart if we are broadcasting country music. We attract the people, events, or experiences into our lives that reinforce our strongest emotional experiences. This is how Dr. Baron defines resonance.

We have all had the experience of walking into a room, or meeting someone, and instantly feeling comfortable or uncomfortable. Many people describe it as getting a good or bad "vibe" from someone. That "vibe" is our QRF interacting with another person's QRF.

Every single person in your life is there to show you something, as Amanda learned. It may be to reflect a part of yourself that you have repressed, an issue you need to deal with, or maybe he or she is just there so you can learn to say "no" to him or her.

The important thing to remember is that your life is your reality, your movie, in a world of infinite possibilities in a vast universe. You are the director, the screenwriter, casting director, producer, and any other role needed to produce your movie. If at any time you are not enjoying the movie that is your life, you can get up and choose again—you do not have to wait until the end.

If you begin to notice similar characters, situations, or dramas appearing in your life, you may safely assume that you have created a reality that you unconsciously expect to happen.

If you argue for your limitations, then you will win that argument, and they are yours!

In summary, I have shared with you these ethical insights in this editorial: (1) ask deeper questions than you have in the past, (2) you are never too old to learn, (3) focus on your power moment and its energy to gain fuel in achieving your worthy goal, and (4) your Quality Resonance Field can be expressed as energy to help you achieve your desired outcome.

So, give up any false identity that you may be holding about being too old, too ignorant, too handicapped, too isolated, too deprived, or any other limiting belief. Every one is a lie!
